Two Ishkashimi texts: Children talking¹ Два ишкашимских текста: разговоры детей

L. R. Dodykhudoeva, Z.O. Nazarova

Л. Р. Додыхудоева, З. О. Назарова

The article presents two texts documented by L. R. Dodykhudoeva and Sh. P. Yusufbekov during their fieldwork in Ishkashim in the autumn of 2011. The audio recording of these texts in the Ishkashimi language – a fairy tale and a dialogue – was completed in the village of Ryn, in the Mountainous-Badakhshan Autonomous Region of Tajikistan. These texts are of interest because they document the speech of the young generation of native Ishkashimi speakers (two children of 5 and 6 years old) in a domestic family context.

In addition, these Ishkashimi texts (presented with a translation and interlinear glossing) are a contribution to the corpus of written texts in the Ishkashimi language, which, like other Pamir languages, still lacks a written tradition.

Key words: Pamir languages, Ishkashimi, Mountainous-Badakhshan Autonomous Region, Tajikistan, ethnolinguistics, linguacultural studies, bilingualism, folk tale, kinship terms

Вниманию читателя предлагаются два текста, записанные Л. Р. Додыхудоевой и Ш. П. Юсуфбековым в ходе полевой работы в Ишкашиме осенью 2011 г. Аудиозапись предлагаемых текстов на ишкашимском языке — сказки и диалога — была сделана в селении Рын Горно-Бадахшанской автономной области, Таджикистан. Настоящие тексты представляют интерес как документы, фиксирующие запись речи младшего (дети 5 и 6 лет) поколения жителей этого ишкашимского селения на родном ишакашимском языке в контексте семьи.

При этом данные тексты, представленные в сопровождении английского перевода и поморфемной нотации всех словоформ в высказывании, являются вкладом в корпус письменных текстов на ишакашимском языке, который — как и прочие памирские языки — до сих пор не имеет письменности.

1. General information about the texts and their documentation

Most adults in Ryn (Ishkashim district) are bilingual, speaking both Ishkashimi and Tajik. However, pre-school children do not know Tajik and speak only their mother tongue, Ishkashimi. In the course of school education — beginning from 6 years old — they acquire knowledge of Tajik.

These texts were recorded by L. R. Dodykhudoeva and Sh. P. Yusufbekov during their field work in Wakhan and Ishkashim in autumn 2011 in the village of Ryn, in the Mountainous-Badakhshan Autonomous Region of Tajikistan. The texts were recorded in a family where all generations speak their mother tongue, Ishkashimi. This family had lived in Ryn for several generations, and all its members were born in Ryn.

The first text is a folk tale about a mother goat and its kids, widely known in Central Asia, Iran and Afghanistan and also in Russia. It is known among the peoples of Tajikistan by the title “The goat with curly legs” (“Buzaki jingilapo”) [Sukharev, Sukhareva 1934: 25–44; Rosenfeld 1948: 206; Koza 1952]. Tajik versions of the tale are still widely known today as “Buzaki jingilapo”

[2013; 2019]. However, in the Tajik versions, the mother goat may have three kids, named Alūl(ak), Bulūl(ak) and Khishtaki-Sari-Tanūr(ak) [2013], or seven kids with the addition of those named Toqchaparak, Mekhchaparak, Boloshinak and Tahshinak [2019]. Cf. the Persian version where the goat also has three kids called Shangul, Mangul, and the youngest — Angurak [Shangul i Mangul 1958].

The Tajik versions are widespread among the Tajik population, and nowadays it is difficult to find a place where this tale is unknown. It is known locally in the Tajik part of Ishkashim among adults and children under the name “The Tale of Alul(ak), Bu-lul(ak) and Khishtaki-sari-tanur(ak)” (data from field interviews by L.R. Dodykhudoeva and Sh.P. Yusufbekov in 2011).

Our first narrator, a 6-year-old boy N., who spoke only his native tongue but had started learning Tajik in preschool classes, knew this tale as “The Tale of Bulul” (Bulul(ak) afsona). Another version of this tale, narrated by a senior Ishkashimi speaker and former teacher, Jahonoro Kholdorova, in the same village of Ryn and recorded later in 2018, is called “The Story of Alulak” [2021]². This folk tale about a mother goat is widely known throughout Tajikistan and exists in several versions in all the Pamir languages. There is a similar folk tale in Shughnani with a plot close to the Ishkashimi tale about a goat and a wolf. On the other hand, a tale was recorded in the Khufi vernacular about a mother goat and her two kids, who were tricked and eaten not by a wolf, but by a bear [Sokolova 1966: 394–395]. A similar folk tale about a mother goat and her two kids, also eaten by a bear, is known in Torwali, ² Jahonoro Qurbonovna Kholdorova was the first primary school teacher of one of the authors of this article, Zarifa Nazarova. She taught in Ryn at Sharif Rahmatov School № 20. Unfortunately, in the 2018 video recording produced by the Endangered Language Alliance (ELA), her family name was misprinted in the credits. The authors take this opportunity to express their gratitude for her diligence and commitment in teaching monolingual Ishkashimi children in the Tajik language, the medium of instruction.

one of the Dardic languages, under the title “Angaag o Bangaag (and Changaag)”³.

Our second text, a dialogue, was recorded as a conversation between an adult (B.) and a five-year-old girl (M.), who spoke only her native tongue, Ishkashimi. This dialogue formed part of the process of teaching the child kinship terms and names of family members (for more on the challenges of first language acquisition in early childhood, see [Dodykhudoeva 2021; Edelman, Dodykhudoeva 2021]. This dialogue sheds light on the structure of the extended family and names of family members, and also provides an insight into the proper names preferred by inhabitants of Ishkashim.

These texts are an additional contribution to the corpus of written texts in the Ishkashimi language, which, like other Pamir languages, still lacks written texts and a written tradition; for more details on this topic see [Pakhalina 1959; Pakhalina, Nazarova 1997; Nazarova, Nazarov 2010]. However, the first children’s books in this language have just recently been published [Ibrad urvesok... 2021; Shaghol-ət urvesok 2021].

Comments on the text

* The name Xəstaki-sari-tanurak is derived from Tajik ‘a small brick on the top of the oven (tanur)’. This name is based on an izafa construction:

Xəstak-i	sar-i	tanurak
brick.DIM-IZ	sar-IZ	oven.DIM

However, in the fairy tale (Tajik and Ishkashimi) it is understood as one name, fused into a single element as a result of accretion.

In the course of translation and glossing of the text some slight amendments were introduced as a more suitable alternative to the original text.

⁴ There are a number of compound verbs in the Ishkashimi language; they include pay kûlûk ‘tear, cut’ [Pakhalina 1959]. Usually these verbs are used as a single unit in a phrase, but here parts of this verb were used separately. Cf. Wakhi pay(i) ‘crack’, Sarikoli poyi ‘id’ [Pakhalina 1975], Wakhi pay Adj. ‘torn’ (from Tajik), pay di ‘tear, cut’ [Grunberg, Steblin-Kamenskiy 1976], Tajik pora ‘piece, fragment, cut, torn (to pieces)’ [TRS 2006]. All these can be connected with Proto-Iranian *⁵*par-* ‘to separate, to divide into parts’ [Edelman 2020: 164].
